

The Texas Landowner Incentive Program (LIP) offers funding opportunities for private landowners wishing to implement natural resource conservation practices on their lands. As the vast majority of Texas lies in private hands, so too does the opportunity and responsibility for good conservation stewardship.

LANDOWNER INCENTIVE PROGRAM

As a program, LIP efforts are focused on projects aimed at creating, restoring, protecting and enhancing habitat for rare or at-risk species throughout the state, as well as activities that positively impact our valuable riparian areas and watersheds.

Through various funding partnerships, the program is able to offer project cost-sharing with private landowners on LIP projects. This means that while TPWD will cover a percentage of the proposed project costs, a landowner is expected to contribute a minimum percentage through various forms of match (in-kind labor, materials, monetary, etc.)

Projects showing the greatest benefit to targeted watersheds and/or species receive priority, as do projects offering long-term protection, long-term monitoring and greater than the required minimum landowner contribution. This program has no acreage restrictions.
