

Sierra Diablo WMA

Drawn Gun Hunts – Hudspeth and Culberson Counties

Background

The Sierra Diablo WMA is 11,624 acres and is named for and located in the mountain range extending north and south along the Hudspeth and Culbertson county line. The area was acquired by Texas Parks and Wildlife in 1945 to serve as a sanctuary for the last remaining desert bighorn sheep in Texas. The Area is currently utilized for the restoration, conservation and management of bighorn sheep and contains the largest free-ranging population of bighorn sheep in Texas. As such, caution must be used while hunting for other species. The WMA has a well-established and stable desert mule deer population. Rough rugged hills and steep canyons make up the area which is reached from the southwest across gentle, sloping foothills. After attaining an average elevation of 6,200 feet, the topography breaks sharply with 2,000-foot drops to the desert floor to the east.
