PRECAUTIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

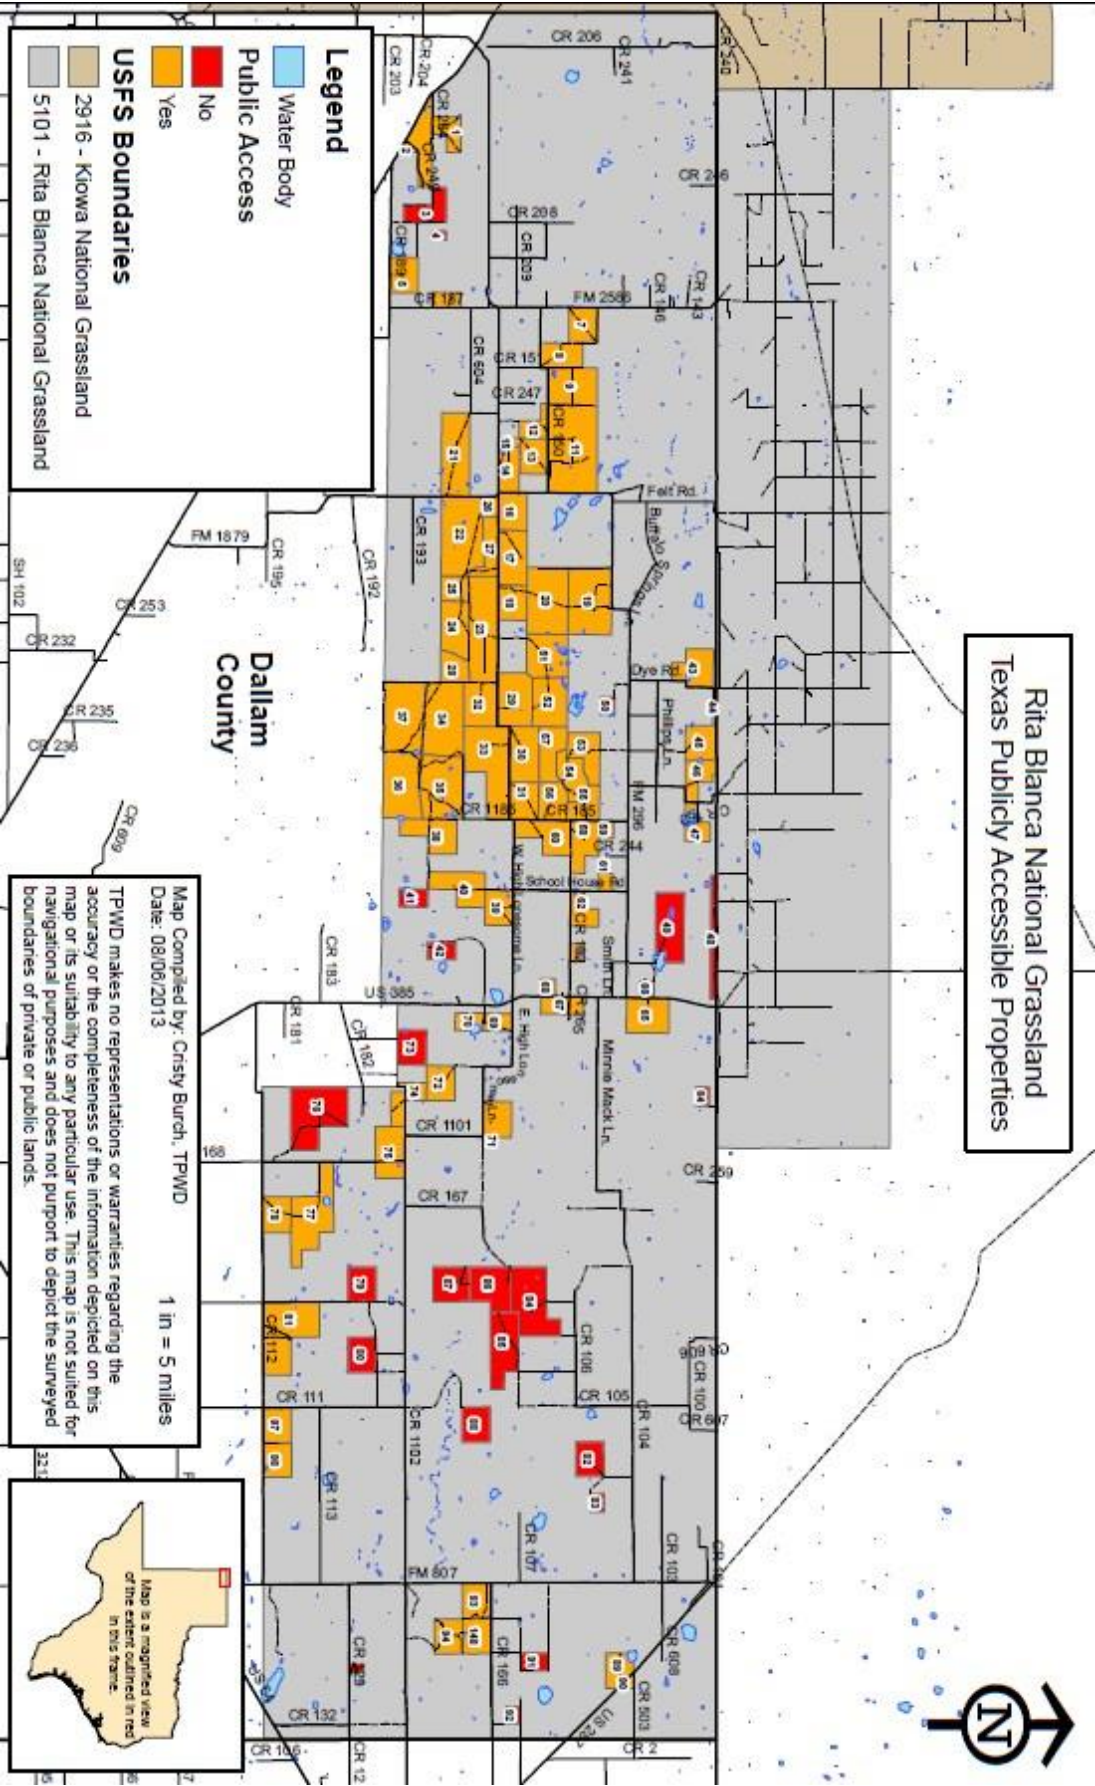

On some areas of the Rita Blanca National Grasslands there is the possibility of an active epizootic of bubonic plague in small rodents, especially prairie dogs, which with their associated fleas, could present a hazard to persons engaged in outdoor activities in these areas. These fleas are generally restricted to rodents and not normally found on other species of wildlife. Sound judgement and reasonable caution should be exercised. The following suggestions will help reduce possible exposure:

- A. Wear protective clothing. Pants legs should be tucked into socks and long-sleeved shirts should be worn.
- B. Use an insect repellent containing the ingredient "DEET" (diethyltoluamide) on exposed skin and clothing.
- C. Do not handle dead rodents or rabbits and stay clear of prairie dog towns.
- D. Place sleeping bags on cots and not directly on the ground.

E. Seek medical attention if experiencing flu-like symptoms and/ or enlargement of lymph nodes within 2-14 days following possible exposure, especially if insect bites are present.
