STATE PARK

Tucked away in the dense pineywood forest of Northeast Texas lies Daingerfield State Park, a popular escape for families year-round. Most activities focus on the park's small lake, especially during the summer when people swim in its clear, cool water. The Civilian Conservation Corps built the park from 1935 to 1939, including a group lodge. Activities include a scenic hiking trail that encircles the lake and summits one of the tallest hills in East Texas, and Saturday night dances.
